Marriage of Henri Rochefort.
The particulars of the romantic marriage of Henri Rochefort, who, during the empire, was the ideal of republicanism, and worshipped for a while by the people, and who is now in prison for his extreme opinions, is given by the correspondent of the London Globe, who says:

Several years ago, when the man now condemned to detention for life was the young Comte de Rochefort Lancy, he wooed and won Marie Anastasia Renauld, the daughter of an employee in the ministry of finance. They were at the time almost boy and girl—he, I think, twenty, and she sixteen—and did not find it necessary to consecrate their affection by any other ceremony than those vows of constancy which usually prove of very transient force.

It was not so, however, in this case. By successive stages the Comte de Rochefort left himself be carried away by his virulent wit and his eager desire for notoriety, until he became famous for satires which were certainly out of all keeping with an ancient title, and he wisely dropped his rank. It is poor work attacking a fallen man. And I will not inquire now whether some of his extravagant articles, which, however, meant, could but fall like oil on the fire of fiercer men's passions, were not equally unworthy of the plain citizen. Henri Rochefort claimed to be. The natural result of such a career has been at one time exile, at another implication in the horrors committed by those who were or had been his followers, and finally the condition of a prisoner for the rest of his life. During all his changes of fortune except the last, Madame Renauld has remained with him. At Brussels, when he was in exile, at Paris during the siege, they were together, and they have only been parted lately, owing to her illness. This is at present so dangerous that in all probability death must come soon. She could not meet this calmly without remedying for her children, as French law enables her to do, the mistake made years ago.

There were difficulties in the way. She could not be moved from her bed, and her lover had ceased to have the right, or at least the power, to control his own actions. However, these obstacles have been overcome, and the prisoner was permitted, yesterday, to come, strongly guarded at every step, to make the dying woman, in the Convent of the Augustines, at Versailles, at least his wife. By this the children, daughter and two sons, become legitimate. No wonder that people have talked of little else the last two days. Curiosity was naturally excited to know each detail of this strange conclusion to a singular story; but the matter was so well and quietly managed that very few inquisitive spectators could get in where their presence would have been most unacceptable.

Rochefort was brought to the Maison d'Armes of Versailles on Monday night, and thence his marriage procession started yesterday morning. It consisted of one large hired carriage conveying the bridegroom and three police agents (dressed in plain clothes); it left the prison at a very early hour, and had for escort a very strong guard of gardiens de la paix, who also surrounded in force the Maison de Sainte attached to the Convent of the Augustines. Here, on the second story, was No. 3—a little room, opening, as all such do in places of confinement, from a great public corridor, and in this lay the bride. As the poor paralyzed woman could not, of course, be moved to the altar or to the church for either the civil or religious ceremony, M. Rameau, the maire, had come to her bedside. The marriage instrument was read by him, while M. Rochefort stood by the bride, holding her hand. It was then signed by both, though the effort drew from her a cry of pain, and witnessed by Francois Victor Hugo, Ernest Blum, Jean Destrein, and the eloquent barrister Albert Joly. This legal validity to the marriage and status to the children, but M. Renauld (as the Rappet sisters half apologetically had begged for a religious ceremony also, and Rochefort could not refuse a request which will be probably her last. The blessing in the church was therefore bestowed on the pair by the Abbe Follet chaplain of prisons. After this M. and Madame Rochefort were released from surveillance for a short half-hour, and left absolutely alone. At the expiration of this time they parted, and at 11 o'clock of this time they were wedded. The bridegroom, with the same precautions, was conducted back to his temporary prison, his conductors, by the rapid pace at which they took the carriage, appearing to grudge the favor shown; and last night he was carried in a prisoner's van to his place of permanent confinement in the Le de Re.

"SPEAKING EVIL."—"There is perhaps no greater social evil than that which is here pointed out. The readiness of society to receive reports to the disparagement of others is perhaps one of the chief encouragements to detractors and calumniators in their wicked work. In the Apostle Paul's beautiful description of charity, one of its distinguishing features is that it "thinketh no evil," and another that it "rejoiceth not in iniquity." The most superficial observer of human nature must be aware how reluctant those who are themselves pure and honest are to doubt the purity and integrity of others. The want of charity towards each other is a worse evil among men than so-called evil. It is the most cowardly as well as the most impoverishing of robberies, for the victim thus despoiled may be as ignorant of the wrong done, as innocent of the offence charged, and hence have no means of exculpation. When slanders are directed against a woman, the baseness and enormity of the crime are increased in proportion to her helplessness, and the more terrible ruin that is involved in the loss of false reputation than in that of man. It is among the greatest of calamities that no adequate punishment can be found for such crimes.
